Going to the airport is always hassle, which is why most airports usually have plenty of food and shopping options to keep people busy. Luckily for travelers going through DFW International Airport, it was recently announced that EatZi's Market and Bakery will open up at the airport. The new location is expected to be ready by the summer.

Travelers at DFW International Airport will soon be hoping for flights through terminal D, as it was recently announced a new EatZi's will soon open up there. While no official opening date has been announced, the space where the market will occupy is set to begin alterations in March, and is expected to be complete by July. According to WFAA, EatZi's will occupy 2,080 square feet of space, and renovations will cost $900,000.

This new EatZi's location will be a miniature version of what customers normally expect, as other locations are typically much larger. Other dining options coming to terminal D include Cake Bar and LUCK. Soon, the traveling experience will be a little better at DFW International Airport.
